Overview

Across a number of EU Member States, absenteeism, unemployment and long-term disability claims due to work-related stress and mental health problems are increasing. In particular, it is estimated that depression will soon be the leading cause of sick leave in Europe. According to the OECD, it is estimated that one in five people of working age are suffering from a mental disorder of mostly mild or moderate nature such as depression or anxiety. As such, good mental health is increasingly important for economic growth and social development in Europe.

Mental disorders in the workplace should not be overlooked as they represent a major productivity loss, and considerable social and economic costs. In the EU25, productivity related costs of mental disorders reach approximately €137bn, and these costs will continue to grow. Providing a healthy and inclusive working environment is therefore encouraged as it can prevent mental health problems in the workplace and beyond.

With the launch of the EU Joint Action on Mental Health and Well-being (February 2013), a 3 year initiative funded by the EU Health Programme, the European Union aims to create a framework for action in mental health policy at the European level. The Action brings together 45 associated and collaborating partners representing 27 EU Member States and associated countries.

Building on the work done under the European Pact for Mental Health and Well-being and following the 2011 Council Conclusions on the European Pact for Mental Health and Well-being, the Joint Action seeks to address the promotion of mental health at the work place; to improve actions against depression and suicide; and to promote the integration of mental health in all policy areas. EU policies would gain from giving more emphasis on the health aspect of occupational safety through the promotion of mental health and well-being.

This international symposium provides a timely opportunity for key stakeholders to discuss current frameworks and initiatives for action to improve mental health in the workplace. Integrated policies can help meet the challenges of the changing labour market and, as such, the symposium will allow delegates to share ideas and best practices from across Europe.
